THE CITY TRUSTEES.

Curious Complications Over the Registry Printing.

Night before last the City Trustees had a meeting; a sort of special meeting in fact, the special object of which appeared to be to give the Nevada Union the contract for printing the Registry list of the municipal voters.

For some curious reason or other none of the other papers had been notified to put in bids, and consequently the only bid put in was from the publisher of the Union.

The bid was worthless as a bid, from the fact that the publisher aforesaid labored under the impression that the law contemplated advertising the list, whereas it contemplates no such thing. It is a piece of job work, and nothing else. Notwithstanding the fact that the Union has been for some months past vociferating in the interests of taxpayers against the practice of high rates for printing, the Union publisher, supposing that his would be the only bid in, put it (and it pains us grievously to say it) at the top figures allowed by law.

It happened, however, that the publishers of the Tribune and APPEAL strolled up into the meeting in quest of items, and to their astonishment found that the Union bid was in and about to be accepted.

They asked leave to bid, when Mr. Muller, Chairman of the Board, remarked that he thought the whole matter had better be put over until some other meeting. The other publishers, however, insisted on their rights, and proposed to bid. Mr. Muller remarked that as the Union bid was known it placed that paper at a disadvantage if he was underbid.

The publisher of the APPEAL remarked that if the main idea of letting bids, as expressed by Mr. Muller, was to enable the city to secure the advantage of cheap rates, an underbid would be a saving to the city.

Mr. Muller had not seen it in that light before, and there was a long silence. It was then moved that all bids be withdrawn to enable new bids to be put in again.

The publishers of the Tribune and the APPEAL demanded that they be allowed to put in their bids, and did so. Although the APPEAL publisher knew the Union publisher's bid—15 cents a name, (the highest legal rate) the APPEAL's bid struck the table, being put at 15 cents also. The Tribune bid was not announced. Several motions were made, and the Board finally decided to defer action, as Messrs. Klein and Bryson were absent.

The APPEAL's bill of $5 for advertising came up, and it was discovered that the original contract was for $10. This caused quite a flutter, and the Board decided to pass on the bill at the next meeting, as it was the first time a Carson publisher had ever put in a bill for less than the contract.

Meeting adjourned.

A New Telegraph Line to S. F.

A current rumor is gaining great credence on the Comstock and gladdening the hearts of business men and stock-dealers here, to the effect that John Mackay and his Postal Telegraph Company intend shortly to construct a through telegraph line between here and San Francisco, to connect there with their trans continental line. The line will be of the most solid construction, so as to carry a number of wires, more than sufficient to do all the possible business they can acquire. A large reduction in present telegraph rates is promised, and that with improved times, abundance of ore extraction and the big reduction in telegraph tolls, the business inclined Comstocker feels inclined to smile all over. At any rate he "smiles" as often as his finances and the steering capacity of his friends will allow.—Daily Report.

Public Apology.

The APPEAL wishes to tender its apology to Monsieur Clemitis Berry for charging him with being hired to clean out the editorial room of the APPEAL and neglecting to perform his duty. We have just learned that Mr. Berry is in jail for fifteen days for endeavoring to paint the town red, contrary to law. As soon as Mr. Berry is out he will please call around and give the sanctum a good sweeping.

—Hugh J. Mohan was in the city last night in the interests of the Reno Stockman.

KISSANE AND LLOYD.

Why Rogers and Lloyd Wear Their Beards Differently

A San Francisco correspondent writes:

We hear nothing but Kissane everywhere. The Bee has paralyzed the newspapers here, and the streets echo every night, until they are deserted, with the cries of the assiduous newsboys. It sounds odd in the streets of San Francisco to hear a country paper called out almost to the exclusion of the city papers. Then it is the town talk, and the enterprise of the Sacramento journal has given it a name it never could have gained otherwise.

"I never believed that there was any power on earth that could silence the Examiner," said a reporter on that paper today.

But electricity is the foremost force in nature, and it was electricity that stopped the Examiner. It came in the shape of a telegram from Senator Hearst from Washington. Hearst and Haggin are intimately identified in sundry land schemes, and Haggin is intimately related to a large number of the Kissane outfit.

Reuben H. Lloyd has grown tired of being pointed out upon the streets as the brother of the now notorious Kissane, and has fled the city. Kissane himself is in hiding somewhere in the city. By the way, the change of names was not the only means resorted to to conceal the identity of Lloyd and his brother. Kissane wears a long, heavy, full beard, while Lloyd wears no beard at all. He is a spare, hatchet-faced man, with an eye like an eagle, and a shrewd, sharp expressive smile. Nobody would surmise that they were brothers save from the keen, brilliant, yet cold eye of both of them.

Not Isolated.

Nevada is getting her full share of the boom. Her lands are of consequence, and with proper encouragement her population will increase until frontier hermits like the editor of the APPEAL will have to seek their loved isolation in out-of-the-way places like Nebraska.—Alta.

We can assure the editor of the Alta that because we are running a ranch just outside the city limits we are by no means isolated. We have lively neighbors. We get water by guarding the dam with a shot gun. We go out every few mornings before breakfast and shake a long shovel across a ditch under a man's nose, and he flourishes a hoe under ours. We have had cows mutilated, attempts made to kill horses, and a few months ago some cowardly whelp cut the silken brush off the tail of a thoroughbred cow. From a recital of these facts it will be readily seen that our position in this country is not exactly an isolated one.

A Question for Mr. B. H.

Mr. B. H. in his published communication to the Reno Journal says over his signature that during his administration the State got its equivalent for every dollar paid out of the treasury.

We will ask Mr. Bell this one question:

Did you draw your regular salary from the State while you were away from the prison repairing telegraph and telephone lines, or did you deduct these days from your salary account and turn the money back into the State Treasury?

Any communication on this subject will be cheerfully received at this office and printed.

A Close Shave.

One of the Frankels came very near having his brains let out night before last. One of the defrauded creditors named Quinn boarded the train and would have killed Frankel but for the interposition of a man close at hand. No one would have bothered themselves much, if the whole unsavory crowd of sharpers had been hung on the Ophir trestle work. If the wind had been let out of one of them, it would teach cunning brokers a lesson which they would long remember. The Frankel's will be in Germany in a few months, enjoying themselves on what they cleared up in Virginia City.

Railroad Passes.

President Adams of the Union Pacific once said that the abolition of free pass on that road would add $2,000,000 to the company's earnings, and would permit a reduction in fares. The inter-State Commerce law affords them the opportunity.

Irrigating ditches would do the same thing for Nevada, but the cautious Legislature was afraid to try the experiment.

Curious Journalism.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 19.—Yesterday presented the spectacle of newsboys selling on the streets of San Francisco, copies of the Sacramento Bee, containing full information as to Kissane's real name and exact family connections. Sacramento is ninety-four miles from San Francisco and it struck local newspaper readers as strange; that they should have to depend on a publisher in that distant town for gossip of their own affairs. The extra papers sold readily, and the identity and relationship of the now notorious Kissane, were topics of conversation at every public resort. It is the general opinion that the notorious Sarah Althea Hill, now Mrs. Judge Terry, formerly conspicuous in the Sharon divorce suit, has been instrumental in flooding the town with copies of the Sacramento paper. Her animus was caused, it is said, by Kissane's brother, Reuben Lloyd, a lawyer, having incurred her hostility in the Sharon case. It is said that some time ago Kissane was hunting Gen. Darr with the intention of killing him on sight. Had he done so, the present expose would have been avoided.—New York Mail and Express.

NEW YORK, April 18.—Captain Samuels, who sailed the yacht Dauntless in the race across the ocean with the Coronet, is going to get an unexpected reward in the shape of the appointment as Dock Commissioner in this city. It is a position worth $3,000 per annum, and the politicians are much surprised and annoyed, but the people are well satisfied with the appointment.
